WAPPEN (COAT OF ARMS)

AGNE ANGNE

Description of the coat of arms:

On a red field with silver chevrons, divided in three parts. In the left, and in the upper right corner, the coat of arms has a silver milling wheel.

In the latter complement of the coat of arms, the family of Pierre Agne is identified "Lord of the Nothe le Roux - the faces and silver in three parts".

The mill wheel refers to the carpenter immigrant to Zweibrücken, the mill constructor Peter Agne, Angne, to his children, especially to the miller's art and the miller's family inheritance of Peter Angne, and the mill at Würschhauser/Horschberg.

(A drawing of the coat of arms of Pierre Agne is presented here).

 Seigneur de la Nothe le Roux - Chevronne de gueules et d'argent de trois pièce.

A) introduction:

1. Sense, origin and transformation of the surname,

After A. Dauzat* (2) Agnan (variant is Agne, in the central zone of France) is an old baptismal name which comes from the Latin "holy name" "Anianus". Aignan is a more French variation. The basis for Latin names was the wandering about of the people (due to wars and rumors of wars) and often the result of "vulgar (dialectal) Latin" incorporated into old French speech (3 and 4). The transitory forms of the surname are Anianus -- Anian -- Angnen -- Angne to Agne (compare lineanus to ligne). During the transition the letter "i" actually became a consonant. In the Elsass-Lothringen district* the French-German dialects produced Anguenet, Anquenet, and Arkane. It was the same for d'Agne, which became Daquenet (5).

2. Origin and occurrence.

The first name-bearer in the Pfalz was Peter Agne (IVe), written at the same time in Zweibruecken as Angne, Agne, and Aganet (6 and 7). One can conclude that it was an unsettled name coming out of Metz, Pfalzburg, and Lixheim in France, a Huguenot name that he (Peter) acquired; that Agne is the equivalent of Anguenet. To document this conclusion one visits the archives in Bern (Switzerland) (8), and discovers that the name was not found there in that time period. Its wandering must have been from France through Metz, Pfalzburg, and so on, perhaps through Roth in Lothringen (all of these being more or less in the Pfalz region) to Zweibruecken. The appearances of the name in the Pfalz, Peter Agne or Angne, spread throughout the earlier Duchy of Zweibruecken and in the bordering area of the Holy Roman Electorate, and the County of Hanau-Lichtenberg. Today, this area includes the cities and towns of Zweibruecken, Homburg, Kaiserslautern, Pirmasens, Kusel, St. Ingbert, and the former Bergzabern (area). One group of those bearing the name emigrated to the USA and to Brazil in South America. Two of them returned. These are pointed out on a case-by-case basis in each descendents.

* Translator Note: "After" here could be citing a publication of some sort by its author, A. Dauzat. "After" is often used in the sense of "according to." Dauzat is a surname derived from the village Dauzat-sur-Vodable in the province Puy-de-Dôme in France. "Lineanus" is the Latin form of ligne. Both are word suffixes. Again, Elsass-Lothringen in the German language is a region known as Alsace-Lorraine in French. Today they are side-by-side provinces in France, bordering on Germany, much to the chagrin of the Germans.

3. To the master sequence.

a) With the assistance of information found in the notarized documents from Pfalzburg and Lixheim, located in the Department Archives for Moselle in Metz, and in the Municipal Archives in Strasbourg (3 E 5906/3 in Metz and Vol. 340 and 370 in Strasbourg), and in the church registers from the French Reformed Church in Metz, the family relationships for the ancestors from father, sons, and daughters, etc., were established. Especially valuable was the assistance of Herr Christopher? Christian? Wolf, of the Department of Archives in Bas Rhin, Strasbourg, and the information from the Matriculation of the University of Heidelberg and Geneva. They provided unhindered assistance to research in all available resources.

The article: "Les Activites de quelques bouchas, tanneurs, Merchands de bestiaux d' Origine Huguenote a Pfalsbourg et Bischwiller XVII." See, per Christoff Wolff, precise information concerning the activities of individual members from II and III.

The information about the descendants II, III and IV is confirmed by the registers in the Reformed church registers of Zweibruecken-Ernstweiler; since in the course of the counterreformation in Lorraine individual members emigrated, including Peter Agne Number4 to Zweibruecken.

According to the Departmental Archives in Vienna, Poitiers 63 E - 16 from 1963, resources for researching Pierre Agne of "Sieur de la Mothe-le Roux," the Parish at "Brelin pres de Niort, in Poitou" (page 5) for the period around 1590 - are unfortunately no longer available. Hence, his integrating into the family as the father of branches Ia and Ib has been omitted, although seen historically, time wise and age wise, it could be possible, and it might be possible to affirm the given name "Pierre".

The information in the Zimmerleuth Guild Register in Zweibrücken from 1673 and 1675 concerning IVc and the son of IVa, guarantees the connection to the other documents found in the Palatinate about the associated branches.

b) Not integrated name carriers:

1579 Aignon, son of George Aigne d'ozi (French Reformed church register at Metz).

1584 Jean de l'Agne (Aagnet) {ne Rosiere pres de Saint Nicole) (French reformed church register at Metz).

1795 Jakob Agnan from Parsweiler* near Saargemünd* (Catholic Church register at Saarbrücken.)

c) Way of writing of the surname

Today: Angne - with the secondary branches in Würschhauser - and Biebermühle* (VI h and i) - with the related branches and secondary branches - Würschhausermühle* and Thaleischweiler*, with the Webenheim* branches VII n - q and t.

Angene - with the Thalfröschen* branch and secondary branch.

Agne - with all other relationships, branches and secondary branches.

d) Religion: French-reformed, reforms, lutherisch and Evangelist.

* Translators Note: French Translation to English is, "The Activities of some stopped, tanners, merchants of cattle, Huguenote Origin was Pfalsbourg and Bischwiller XVII."

 villages and towns

B. The master sequence.

When one begins with "'Pierre Agne de la Mothe-le-Roux,' of the Parish of Bresin at Niort in Poictou, who in about 1590 was identified as a member of Company of Armed Soldiers of Poitevire" one is led to the development of the following family tree:

la Benjamin Anguenet also Aganet, merchant (commercial man) to Pfalzburg, French reformed before 1690

1. Mention in 1602 (Municipal Files of Strasburg, Room of the Contracts EBD, Volume 340, F. 46A)

Historical info:

Starting around 1500 the French Reformed church, with strong underpinnings from Calvin, began in France. The result was war and rumors of war from Catholics. From 1562 until 1598 there were the "Huguenot Wars." In 1572, on St. Barthelomew's Night (the massacre of Huguenots) it was said that "Huguenots" was an adaptation of the German word "Eidgenossen", which meant "Of one heart, mind, and purpose" to non Catholic Christians in Germany. It caught on quickly. They were not allowed to practice their faith – were chased from towns. At the time of Heinrich III (1574-1589), Pierre Agne¹, identified on page 5 under B, belonged to the Lords of Monte le Roux, a military company in Poitevins. In 1589 the Edict of Nantes, under Heinrich IV, was imposed, limiting the destruction of Huguenots and their settlements.

 A schirmer made things, all the way from umbrellas to leather wagon brake handles and seat covers.

¹ Translator Note: The French reformed were Huguenot Protestants. The surname Anguenet, Angenet, Agean, d'Agne, Danguenet (d'Anguenet) and Dagne are all varied spellings of the same surname.

In 1685 the Edict of Nantes limitations imposed under Ludwig XIV were lifted. Wholesale slaughter of the Huguenots was resumed. Many Huguenots fled to Holland, England, Brandenburg, the Pfalz and other jurisdictions (Pfalzburg, Lixheim, and so on). France lost valuable moral, intellectual, and highly prized crafts.

In 1552 Metz had been conquered by the French, as were other area towns -- such as Pfalzburg, which belonged to the Pfalz (Palatinate^{}) Duchy of Zweibrücken. It was sold to Lorraine in 1583. The members of the Reformed Church left -- not without compulsion -- for the towns of Bischweiler and Zweibrücken, and other places. In 1623 the Kurpfalz (Holy Roman Electorate) of Lixheim was sold to Lothringen. In 1681 Strassburg* was lost. From 1688 to 1697 the Eroberungskrieg (War of Conquest) was pursued by France, seeking to acquire the Pfalz (Palatinate) by force of arms.

* Translators Note: The contested area bounced back and forth under French and "German" control. Lothringen was one part of Elsass-Lothringen in "Germany," which became Elsass Lorraine in France. "German" Strassburg became French Strasbourg. I put "German" and "Germany" in quotes, since Germany didn't exist as a unified nation until 1871. Before that it was a collection of Grand Duchy's, Duchy's, Principalities, Kingdoms, City-States, Holy Roman Electorates, and so on. The Pfalz (Palatinate) was a region containing many "German" villages and towns.

 This is the translation, but I think it means Born in 1697

* A Dreher was a turner of some sort. One usually thinks of him as walking along behind a horse- or oxen-drawn device, turning the hay over. However, there are two other translations: the dance leader (turner) at evening festivities on someone's farm, or perhaps in the village; and a lathe operator! Without more contexts, you can take your pick! Today we think it unusual for someone with a title like lawyer or consultant or bailiff as being involved in common or everyday tasks. However, it happened that when a lawyer, for example, was "lawyering," he worked his farm
